Despite being a work of fiction, it is primarily about real-world struggles that people face - from Binx dealing with flashbacks from camp to her mother worrying about whether or not she'll ever find love again after the trauma of being molested by another child at summer camp. The best part about this book is that it's very relatable for many young adults, particularly young women. The series of books are about a character named "Binx", who gets molested at summer camp when she was 7 years old, due to her naivety towards boys at the time. When she goes to school, she finds out that the girl who was molested at the summer camp had killed herself and that the person who had molested her was found guilty of manslaughter. The book also deals with elements such as anger, loneliness, loss and regret. The background theme of the book is about "can things ever get back to how they used to be?" It deals with some controversial events such as suicide and violence. There is a new strain of mental illness in the book called confusing and amnesia disorder and what it means for Binx and people around them. The book also deals with prejudice because a lot of people did not understand what happened to Binx and thought that she was crazy. The book also talks about two major themes: 1) one of them is class and 2) the other is "should we change our future because of our past" There are three editions of the book which include: hardcover, paperback and e-book.
